

Timeless Touches

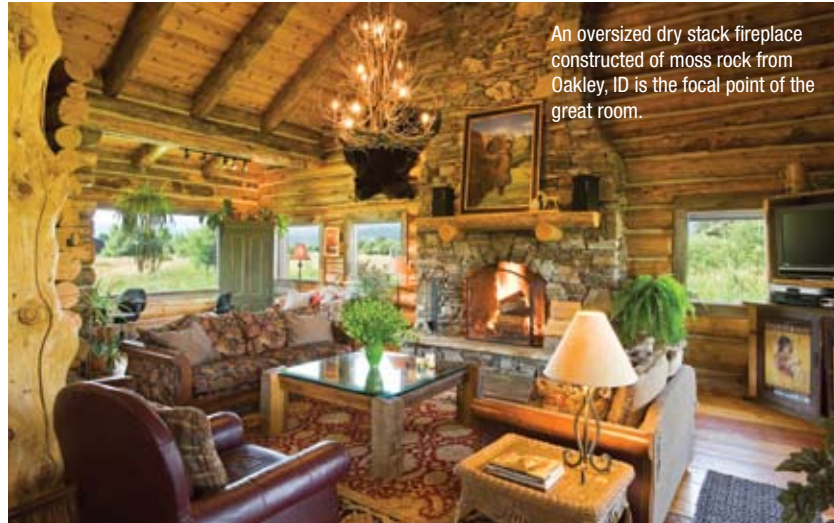

+ Photography by Carl Oksanen

Blue skies, native grasses and a grove of trees are all that separate the property from blending into the magnificent Teton horizon.

Natural light flows into the house through large windows and French doors, revealing a private back patio.

An oversized dry stack fireplace constructed of moss rock from Oakley, ID is the focal point of the great room.

Seated prominently at the base of the Teton Range with unobstructed views — but privately tucked away on sleepy Green Lane — is a lodge-inspired home that breathes charm. This flowing Westbank property, available exclusively through Diane Nodell Real Estate, boasts over three mountain-flanked acres zoned to accommodate horses, an inviting guest cabin, detached shop and an expansive master log home. The panoramic views are exceptional, but the home's custom details that incorporate a collection of reclaimed materials are equally impressive. An artisan's touch is evident.

The striking main floor layout wraps around a massive but inviting great room complete with a dry stack fireplace. "This house was constructed with a visual art principle guiding the layout and design," builder and owner Mike Envie explains. "It was intentionally built around the views to maintain a balance between the inside and outside spaces, while maximizing natural light."

An abundance of the construction materials—including dead-standing lodgepole pine, rough-sawn Douglas-fir flooring and reclaimed barnwood trim, are native to the area and demonstrate attention to style and social conscience through reclaimed ingredients. "I love to find interesting local materials and incorporate them into my projects," Mike adds. One glimpse of the home's lovingly handcrafted log staircase explains Mike's philosophy. A stunning centerpiece bridging the kitchen and entryway, the staircase artfully integrates a retired section of chairlift cable from Jackson Hole Mountain Resort as a custom handrail secured to the stairs with railroad ties.

The upper floor plan evokes intimate luxury. The master suite is balanced with an oversized loft office overlooking the great room and a private balcony facing the heart of the Tetons. Two additional bedrooms round out the living space with a guest loft room complete with custom storage accessed through original sheep barn doors from a Swan Valley ranch.

Step outside after exploring the many hidden design treasures in the house and you might notice the calm stream meandering through the mountain grass. "One of the priceless qualities of this home is that it's timeless," Mike adds while watching the sun sink over the Tetons. "Contemporary designs are modern for a while, but eventually become dated. Nature is beautiful, never goes out of style and stands the test of time."
